Across the Country, Military Sites Burn Hazardous Waste Into Open Air

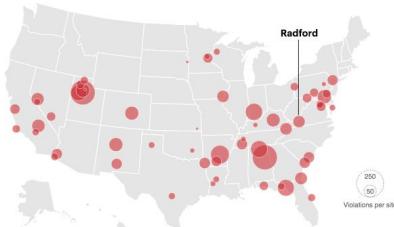

By Hilary Fung, Abraham Lustgarten and Lena Groeger, ProPublica, July 20, 2017

Virtually every day, the Department of Defense and its contractors burn and detonate unused munitions and raw explosives in the open air with no environmental emissions controls, often releasing toxins near water sources and schools. The facilities operate under legal permits, but their potentially harmful effects for human health aren't well researched, and EPA records obtained by ProPublica show that these sites have violated their hazardous waste permits thousands of times. Related story.

61 active sites
197 total sites

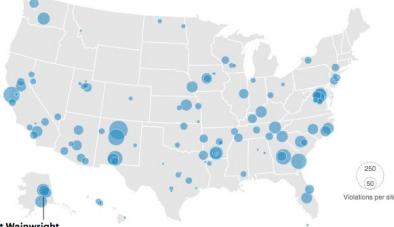

● At Least 61 Sites Active Today

Most active sites, which currently burn or detonate waste into open air, are run by the military and its contractors, according to the EPA and the Pentagon. The Radford Army Ammunition Plant in Virginia, for example, supplies explosives for almost every American bullet fired overseas and is allowed to burn up to 2.9 million pounds of waste every year. The EPA has found Radford in violation of its hazardous waste permits at least 50 times in the past 37 years, for reasons such as mishandling or mischaracterizing its explosive waste, violating standards for its incinerators and improperly monitoring groundwater.

● Many Sites Closed or Abandoned, But Still Potentially Harmful

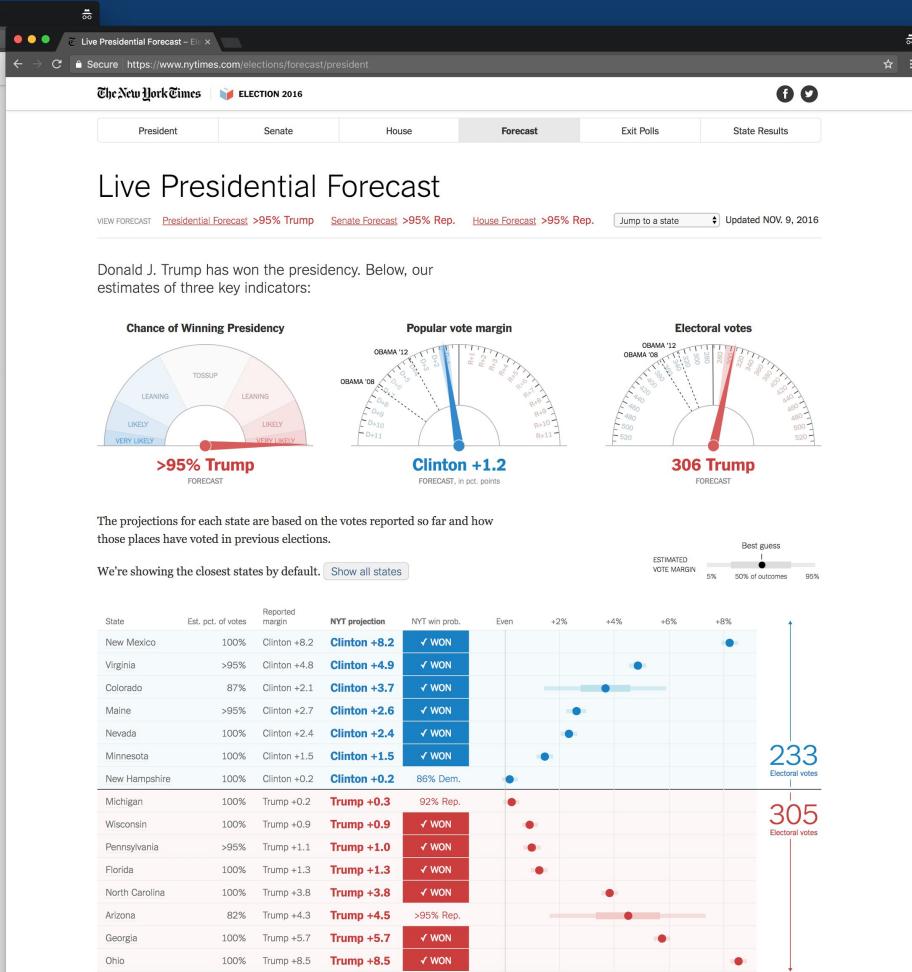

Many of these open-burn sites have been closed or converted to other uses, but many were not properly cleaned. Fort Wainwright in Alaska, for example, accumulated at least 63 violations and is facing corrective action for improper cleaning and closure, according to the EPA.

● Superfund Sites

Some of the above sites are also Superfund sites, designating them as among the nation's most environmentally contaminated sites with the highest cleanup priorities. Based on EPA data.

HeartSaver: An Experimental News Game

HeartSaver

HeartSaver is an experiment in news game design, built in two days for the April 2013 GEN Editors' Lab Hackathon. IMPORTANT: This is not a definitive study of how distance from a hospital affects survival rates.

How do you save a heart? In New York City, where nearly half a million people suffer from heart disease, surviving a heart attack hinges on both how much time it takes to get to the emergency room, and which ER you go to. Quality of care varies across the city, and according to the American Heart Association, a victim's chances of survival decrease by up to 10 percent every minute. What are your chances of surviving a heart attack in New York City? Play HeartSaver to find out.

Your mission: Save as many heart attack victims as possible by getting them to the best emergency room in time.

How to play:

#1: As patients appear on the screen, drag them to the nearest hospital.

#2: Different hospitals have different heart attack care ratings.

I'M READY. START THE GAME.

Read our blog post about what we learned building the game.

What Happened at the Shooting at a Congressional Baseball Practice

Representative Steve Scalise, Republican of Louisiana and the House majority whip, was among several people shot on Wednesday morning when a gunman opened fire at a baseball field where congressional Republicans were practicing. Here is what is known so far:

East Monroe Ave.

Gunshots broke windows at the Y.M.C.A. building.

Capitol Police vehicles were parked behind the dugout.

Senator Jeff Flake and others took cover in the first-base dugout.

Dollars for Docs: Talk With Your Doctor

<https://projects.propublica.org/docdollars/>

You can print this page and show it your doctor.

ProPublica's Dollars for Docs database lets you search for payments to U.S.-based doctors made by pharmaceutical and medical device companies between August 2013 and December 2014. The disclosure of these payments is required under the Physician Payment Sunshine Act, a provision of the 2010 Affordable Care Act.

About This Information

- The information that appears here comes directly from the federal government. Companies must attest to its accuracy and doctors have the ability to contest information they believe is in error.
- This site includes payments for such activities as speaking, consulting, meals, travel and royalties. It does not include payments for clinical research.
- It is legal for companies to make payments to doctors as long as the payments are not a kickback or inducement to use their products.
- Some doctors say collaborative relationships, particularly those involving research, are necessary to develop new treatments and cures. But many ethicists have raised questions about the payments, and studies show that they may influence doctors' prescribing decisions.
- Only you can decide if this matters to you and if so, whether you want to talk to your doctor about it. If you plan to talk with your doctor (or if you already have), please help us by filling out this short survey: propubli/participate-d4d

Preparing for Your Conversation

If you decide you'd like to talk to your doctor about this, please keep in mind:

- Many healthcare professionals in our database have similar names, so you should start by asking your doctor if the person mentioned in this payment record is really him/her.
- Your doctor may not know he or she is listed as receiving payments, especially if the payments are small. You can direct your doctor to this site (the URL will be printed at the top of the payment record) or directly to the government's site here: <https://openpaymentsdata.cms.gov/physician/32354>
- Some doctors are happy to discuss this information with you. Others might not be. The best approach is to ask questions and to not be accusatory.

Questions You Might Want to Ask

- Is this you?
- What type of work do you do with these companies?
- Have you prescribed any drugs that are manufactured by companies you've taken payments from?
- Are there non-drug alternatives that I may want to consider first?
- Are there less expensive generic alternatives to the drugs you have prescribed?
- What devices have you used in my care that are manufactured by companies you've taken payments from?

On Wednesday, ASG's finance board announced its student-group funding recommendations for the coming year. That's the money that helps pay for Dill Day, Andy Samberg and other campus events. The final amounts will be finalized starting next week.

For now, take a look at who's getting what by exploring our interactive chart. The greater the recommended amount, the bigger the group's name. (Co-sponsorships aren't included.) And yes, A&O Productions really does dwarf everyone else when it comes to ASG money.

Scroll over each group for details.

Campus Life Reputations Presidents

NORTHWESTERN VS. WILLIAMS COLLEGE

Mr. Schapiro comes to Northwestern

What changes can incoming Northwestern president Morton O. Schapiro expect as he leaves a remote, no-Chipotle-for-miles college to head up a large, frat-loaded university?

Read our three-part briefing to find out.

Production by Sid Wei, Patrick St. Michel and Tom Giratkanon / North by Northwestern.

So How Do I Start?

1. Pick a project

- Build my first website
- Create an animated video
- Make my first FOIA request
- Figure out how to get satellite imagery
- Analyze data about my high school
- Make a choose your own adventure game
- Make a map
- Annotate an image so it tells a story

2. Break it down

- How are websites built?
- What software makes animated videos?
- Are there templates for FOIA requests?
- Who provides free satellite imagery?
- What data does my high school collect?
- What tools can I use to make a choose your own adventure game?
- What's the easiest way to make a map?
- How do I put text on top of an image?

3. Google it

- How are websites built?
- What software makes animated videos?
- Are there templates for FOIA requests?
- Who provides free satellite imagery?
- What data does my high school collect?
- What tools can I use to make a choose your own adventure game?
- What's the easiest way to make a map?
- How do I put text on top of an image?

3. Google it some more

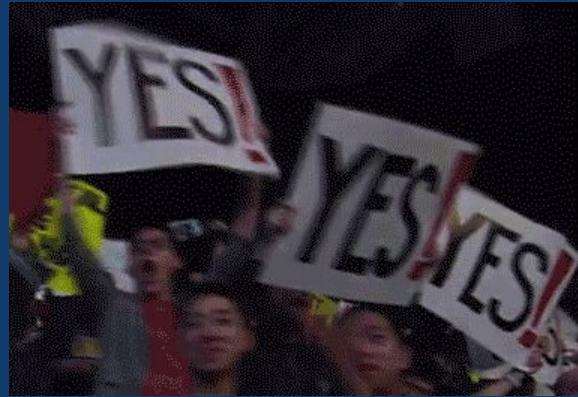

- What's HTML?
- How do I get After Effects for free???
- What if the agency I FOIA ignores me?
- Why won't Google Earth install?
- What's a csv file?
- How do I keep track of information in Twine?
- How to add colors to my CartoDB map
- How do I draw rectangles on an image?

4. Find a community

- Are there people at my student newspaper who want to design, code or do data journalism?
- What about meetup groups near school?
- Where can I ask questions online?
